Many are often uncomfortable around bereaved individuals because they don’t know what to say or do ~ and that is why individual and/or group support from others who have experienced loss is so vital.

I truly believe we all have the power within us to ‘heal our fractured hearts’ ~ sometimes, however, we may benefit from walking beside someone that is further along on that road, helping us to understand and process our own personal grief so we may once again feel that hope of fully embracing life in the present.

Working through and integrating your loss within your mind, body and spirit can be a healing balm for your heart and life, so that over time you can move toward a renewed sense of authentic wholeness.

As painful as grief may be, embrace your challenges and losses and in your own time and way, be open to possibilities and opportunities that may lead to new meaning and purpose and ‘healing’ in your life.

I hope our time together offers you the support, encouragement, and information you are seeking that may lead to renewed hope, meaning, joy, and light in your life...

My Professional Role ~

I am educated and trained as a Grief Counselor and working as a Grief Consultant for individual adults and couples living with the death of a child of any age and from any cause. Other losses [ie., spouse/partner, sibling, parent, friend] are supported as well.

● ● ●

I offer pro bono grief support for an impending death or death of a loved one via confidential and compassionate face-to-face consultations and Online in a safe and comfortable setting as you explore the impact of loss and transition in your life.

My counseling/consulting/spiritual philosophy entails more of a growth and empowerment model for proactively transforming one’s grief versus the medical model of diagnosing and medically treating a specific mental health concern.

However, there may be possible mental health issues [ie., PTSD, grief depression moves to clinical depression] that may also be addressed via medical treatment and/or clinical therapy. I will discuss with you if further diagnostic assessment and/or treatment may be beneficial for you and offer a possible referral. It will then be your responsibility to seek that help from a medical or mental health professional. You are welcome to continue with me for grief support even when working with another professional, if you feel comfortable.

For more information about my practice and my grief counseling education and training, refer to my ‘resume’ posted on my website [About Deb page].

My Personal Experience ~

After the sudden death of our daughter, Kristen, in 1985, I was unable to find someone that was not only trained in the area of grief, but was also a bereaved parent and someone I could talk with one-on-one that truly understood what I was going through.

Fortunately, my husband, Dan, and I found a supportive chapter of The Compassionate Friends in Champaign, IL for group support, but I was unsuccessful in finding more personal one-on-one support.

I felt compelled to do something so others wouldn’t feel as alone as I did, but I wasn’t sure what that ‘something’ was. Then in 1991, I made the decision to pursue a Masters in Counseling to learn more on being with and facilitating the grief process of Individuals and Families who had experienced the illness and/or death of a child or other loved ones.

Also in 1991, Dan and I founded a national Support Group in memory of Kristen to network other Families living with a rare metabolic disorder and often the death of a child as well. After completing my graduate degree in 1993, I felt comfortable expanding our Mission to support local bereaved adults living with the illness and/or death of a child or other loved ones from any cause.

I strongly believe my professional graduate training and my personal experience with a child’s death, some miscarriages, a surviving child’s chronic rare disorder, a father’s death at a very young age, and the death of many other family members and friends, as well as other types of loss, have helped me in my own grief journey and in assisting others find their way along their own challenging road.
